By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

Well it is two-degrees below zero outside, so I am not going outside just now. You know what this means. It means you get yet another view of my Transvaal Daisy, a member of the sunflower family and a kind of mini-sunflower. You have to admit she is pretty even if you have seen her before and you have. And since it was gray and snowing most of yesterday, this is a little ray of sunshine in here.

It's not that I don't have other photos to share. In fact I figured it out. If I posted one nature photo a day, I could post here for the next 273 years. It would have to a family thing, a generational one at that.

Anyhooooo... Not only do I not have fresh photos but I don't even have much to say. I have been mostly writing a lot. There is this. Below is a list of books and articles by yours truly that are available free to download or read at Scribd.com. Many are short but of course very interesting. Check it out. Here is the link.
