To my mind, one of the most important discoveries in my astrological life (some fifty years) has been the Dharma Chart. It literally changed my life forever.

Of course I had been studying my traditional astrological natal chart, and pushing it to give me spiritual direction or at least confirm my innermost sense of who I was. Certainly no one on the outside was confirming that.

Back then I did not understand fully that my traditional astrology chart was a chart of my personality and the circumstances that "I", whoever I am, was embedded in. I knew that beneath the persona and the particular circumstances I was caught up in there was a deeper being, something more, but I had no way being sure of that, so I hovered on the edge of existence for years.

When I discovered my dharma chart, I suddenly had two charts of the same moment in time (my birth) and the same set of planets, but each from a different view. Like a stereopticon, with two perspectives on the same subject, I had suddenly had a 3D view of who I was and why I am here.

The Dharma Chart is a map of our tribe, the archetype or lineage to which we naturally belong. This has given me the confidence for many of the things I have done in life. Here is a short video on the Dharma Chart, only ten minutes long for those interested:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oRw2vKgFn0c

Those of you interested in seeing your own dharma chart can find it here:

Feel free to ask questions.
Dharma Chart
Karma Chart
Astrological Empowerment in the 21st Century

by Michael Erlewine