

EMMA RETURNS

January 24, 2013

By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

Emma and her mom (my daughter) Anne are back for another visit. We missed them. Emma is now one-year old and walking. The first thing she did after she understood who I was and hit the floor was to stand up, say "Hi!" and walk over to me beaming. We are old friends and she was showing me that she could now walk.

Emma would not let me put her down, and if I did, she would cry like crazy until I picked her up again. I could only carry her around for so long because my back is getting old, but we made do. Then she proceeded to walk all over the house, something she had always wanted to do.

Here is a photo of Emma taken by her mom on her first sled ride. It was really, really cold out too. I was not there, but I am told that Emma liked it best when another youngster was in the sled, being pulled around on the snow with her. Later Emma and I watched part of a movie.

Meanwhile, back in the heart of my busyness, I am making progress with the TV series, but it seems so slow. I am still gathering materials and organizing them, but the first segment is shaping up -- so much to learn and do. I love it. Forgive me for not having more to say here just for the time being.